NGO Funding

Gregg M. Nakano

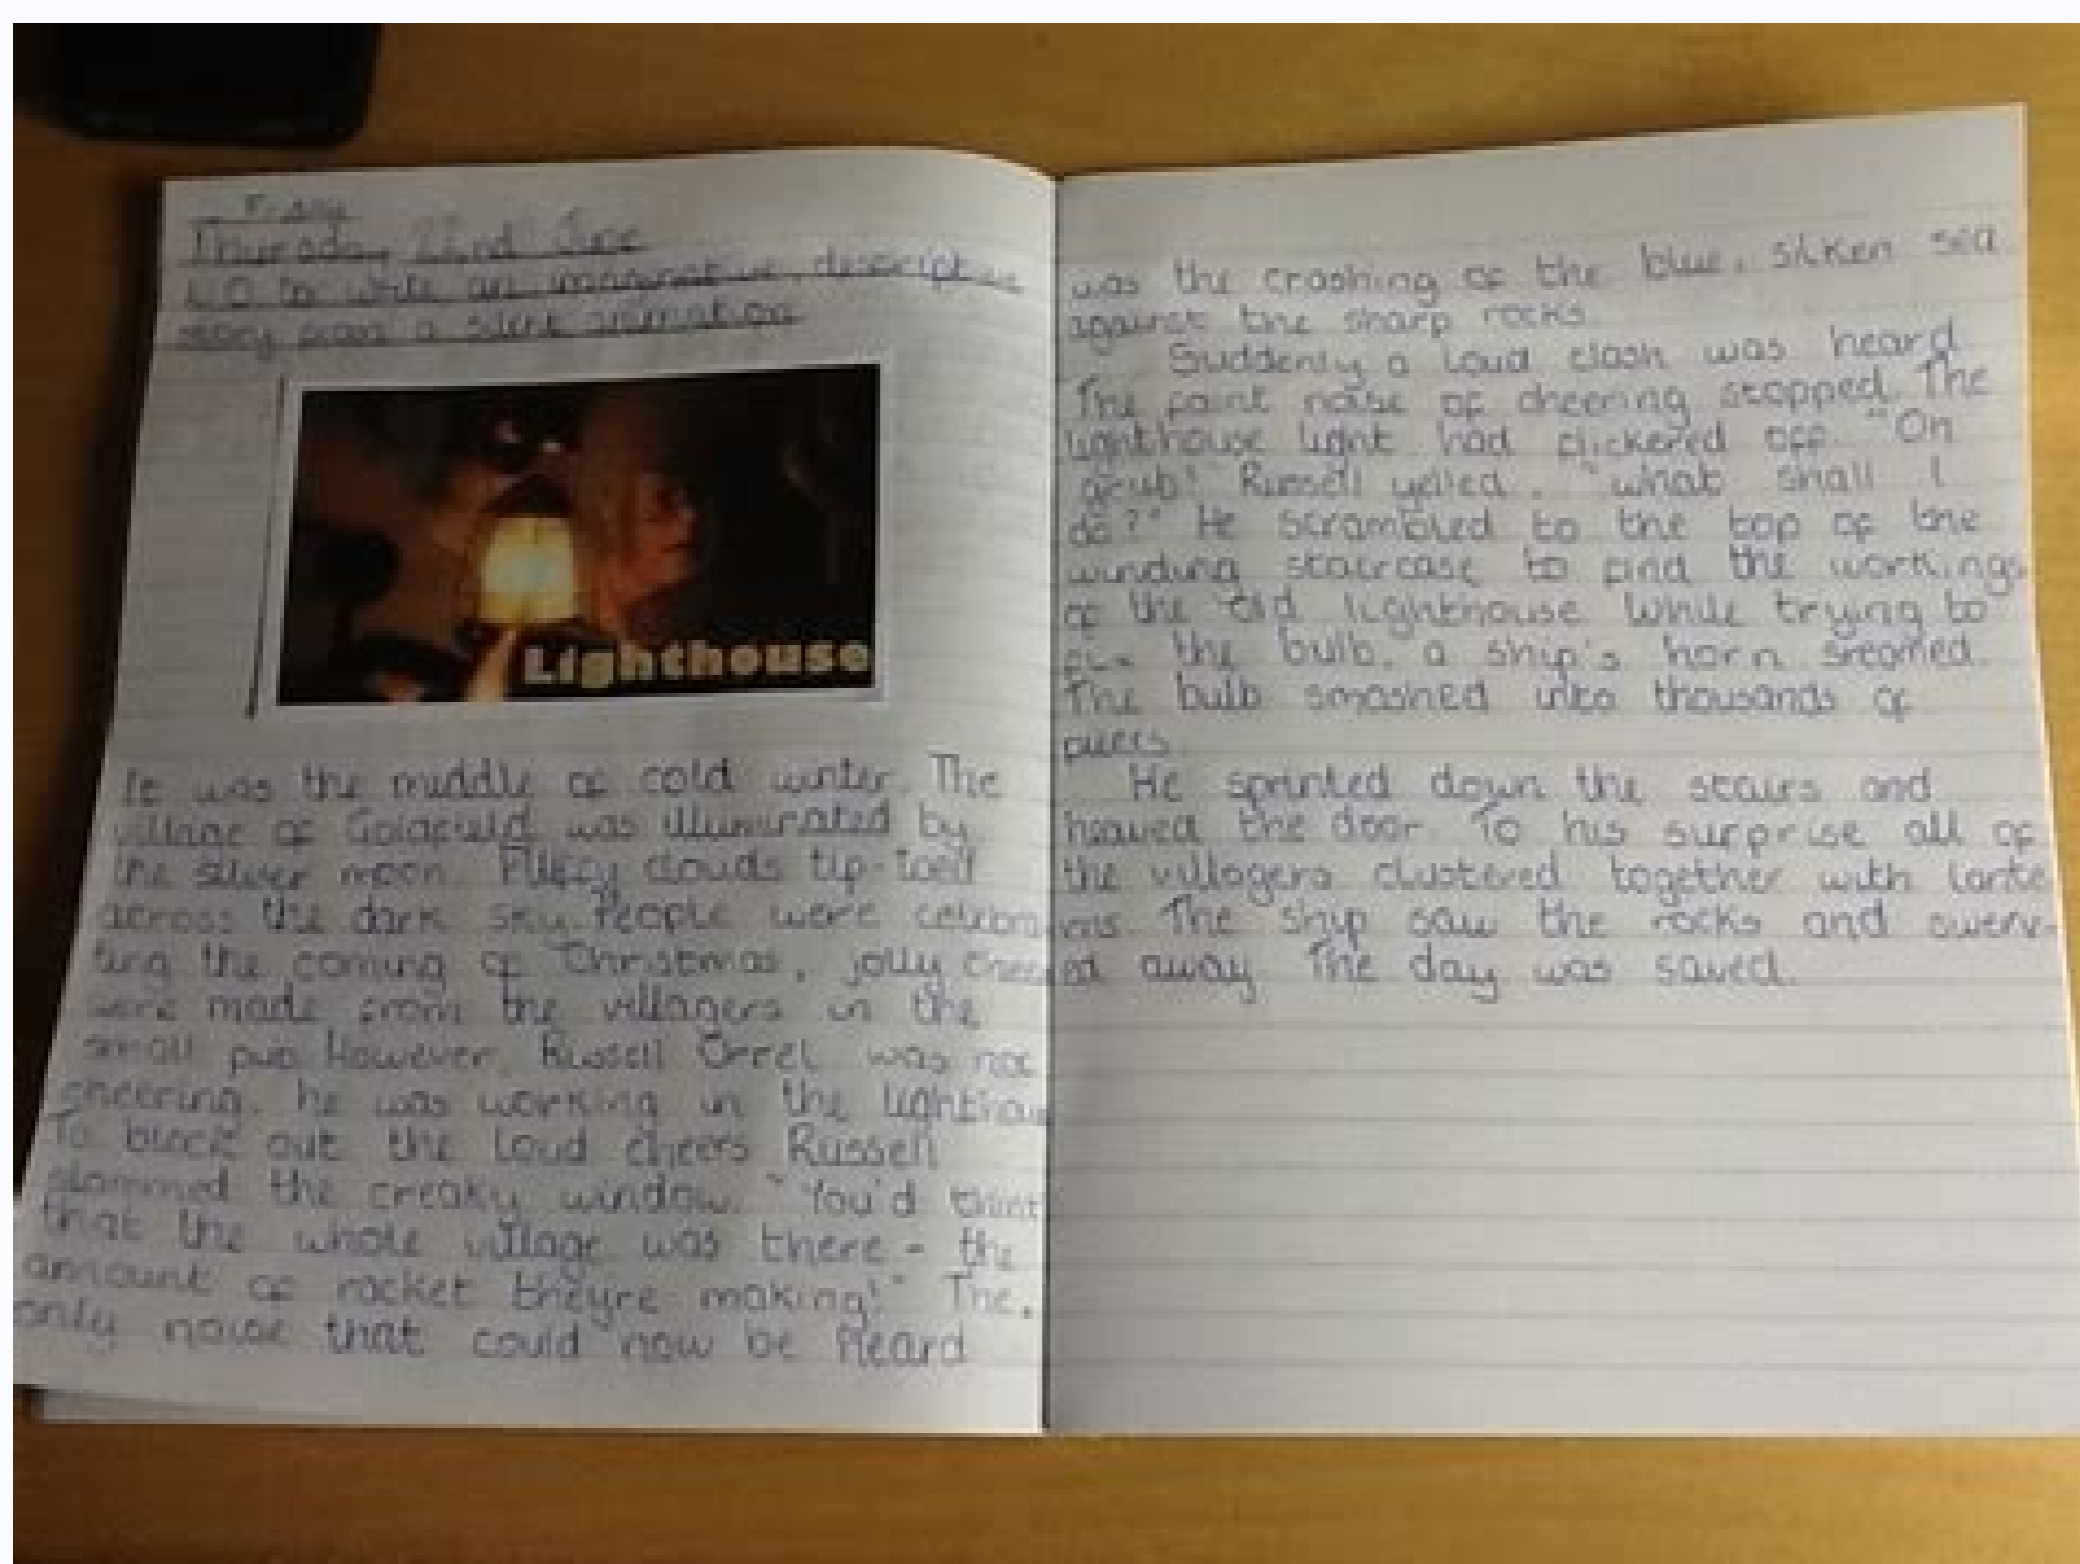

Nongovernmental organizations are legal entities established within a regulated and legal framework normally hosted by a mix of national and local government structures. Depending on where the NGO is established (the United States, the UK, and so on), different rules and laws govern how the organization can accept donations, how it must report its financial data, and to whom it is accountable.

The international governmental community, and the NGO community specifically, does not respond to every humanitarian emergency. Political considerations, special interest pressures, national security concerns, funding constraints, or general humanitarian interests often guide international humanitarian assistance responses. No two responses are the same; the level, types, duration and strategy implemented differ greatly in every emergency.

NGOs are only part of international responses to humanitarian emergencies. Governments, the UN, militaries, private individuals, corporations, companies, and volunteer groups often contribute in various ways to humanitarian emergencies. NGOs require external funding sources to respond, and though some NGOs can afford to establish emergency operations for short periods without specific external support, many NGOs eventually turn to UN funding, U.S., UK, or other government grants, private contributions from foundations, communities, or individuals, or umbrella organizations that distribute funding on behalf of another agency or organization.

Executive Summary

- NGO funding comes from a variety of sources: the UN, the U.S. government, EU governments, private citizens, and foundations.
- Because NGOs depend on funding to become and remain operational, NGOs must spend a considerable amount of time preparing funding proposals and solicitations.
- Only a fraction of total international spending by the United States and EU countries is spent on humanitarian relief.
- NGOs spend billions of dollars every year in humanitarian assistance activities, far outspending any other agency or organization globally.
